

Writing a Business Plan - One Step at a Time

A step-by-step system for new entrepreneurs.

Booklet 1 - The Personal Financial Statement

Personal Financial Statement

Your Personal Financial Statement is the first form your banker will require. Sometimes, it is better to complete this form first and then talk to a banker.

If you are not single, you need to complete this statement as a couple. It must contain information from both you and your spouse (wife, husband, common-law partner). Bankers will want a very clear picture of what you own and what you owe, together! Because you and your spouse function as a family, your spouse's financial position will affect your business. Don't forget your spouse's signature, social insurance number and birth date.

If you have decided that you want to start this business with a partner, other than your spouse, a personal financial statement will have to be completed by you and each of your partners.

It is extremely important that you use resale or "present value" when pricing used items. If you are having trouble finding resale value, talk to real estate agents, and people who specialize in selling used items such as pawnshops, used or consignment stores, car and equipment dealers, or auctioneers.

Always remember to include all taxes when estimating your costs to purchase items.
